Photographs of Selected Impressions of Seals in Volume I with Composite Drawings	1–173
Selected Comparative Features on Seals in Volume I.....	174–291

INTRODUCTION

Plates 1–173 contain photographs of impressions of seals in Volume I. When a seal exists in more than one impression, generally only select impressions (ones that were judged to give the most visual information) are shown. No attempt has been made to document every impression of every seal. When there may be ambiguity as to where an impression occurs on a tablet, or which impression is the relevant one on tablet surfaces that carry multiple impressions of different seals, an arrow (→) indicates the relevant place on the tablet where the impression occurs. The photographs of the impressions of each seal are accompanied by the composite line drawing of the seal. These composite line drawings reproduce exactly the composite line drawings that accompany the catalog entries in Part One. The photographs and the composite line drawings are arranged on the plates so that there is a consistent vertical center for the images. The seals are arranged in catalog order. Both the photographs and the composite line drawings on plates 1–173 are rendered at a scale of 2:1.

Plates 174–291 contain composite line drawings of select seals illustrating comparative features such as iconographic elements, poses, compositional formats, perspectival elements, types of animals and creatures, deities, classes of seal types (e.g., inscribed seals, stamp seals, office seals), seals caps, and borders. These comparative plates are intended to provide a sampling of comparative features. They are not comprehensive either as regards the comparative features or the seals that illustrate them. For a comprehensive accounting of this type of information the reader is referred to the indices in Appendices Four–Eleven and the General Index. The composite line drawings on these plates generally show just one complete rolling of the seal (i.e., they do not reproduce the repeats that are included in the composite line drawings that accompany the catalog entries in Part One). Because the compositions are often densely intertwined, as is typical of the cylinder seal medium, one rolling of the seal often does not result in a neat visual presentation of the full design. In some cases, one rolling of the seal would not capture completely the specific figure, iconographic device, inscription, and so forth that is being highlighted on the comparative plate(s). In those cases, some or all of both repeats may be included in the composite line drawing. The composite line drawings on plates 174–291 are rendered at a scale of 2:1.
